

GQ|Littler has moved up to Band 2 in Chambers and Partners UK

GQ|Littler is delighted to announce that we moved up to Band 2 in the 2023 edition of Chambers and Partners UK.

The firm is recognised as a 'highly experienced boutique employment law firm offering expert advice to large financial services clients and other high-profile organisations.' We are praised for being 'able to assist clients with a range of cross-border and international matters, drawing upon the global expertise of the Littler network.'

Clients who were contacted by Chambers to provide anonymous feedback said, "the advice is pragmatic yet robust and I have every confidence in their ability to deliver. The response time is always quick and expectations are managed."

In this year's guide, Chambers and Partners continues to recognise leading lawyers Paul Quain and Sophie Vanhegan in Band 2 and Band 4 respectively. Philip Cameron also maintains recognition in the Employer: Industrial Relations category as a Band 2 lawyer.

Cerys Williams and Caroline Baker retain their Band 5 and Up and Coming rankings respectively, and Raoul Parekh moves from Up and Coming into Band 5.

The Chambers and Partners employment law rankings recognise the leading employer focused solicitors' firms in London. Ranked lawyers are some of the highest rated in the City and are recommended by their clients for their service, technical expertise, and commercial awareness.

Thank you to our clients for the brilliant feedback and continued support. Our full commentary and rankings can be viewed here.

About GQ|Littler

GQ|Littler is the leading employment law firm for employers in the UK and Ireland. We offer risk-based advice and litigation services on employment, immigration, employee tax and incentives issues. We work globally as part of Littler, the world's largest employment law firm with over 1,700 lawyers in 100 offices worldwide. For more information, visit www.gqlittler.com.

