

Surge in disability discrimination cases at employment tribunals

The Financial Times - 13 January 2020

Companies are noticing an increase in workers willing to lodge mental health issue claims in employment tribunals. This follows the abolition of hearing fees and has caused a rise in disability discrimination cases.

Paul Quain, employment lawyer at GQ|Littler, said: "There is some anecdotal evidence that claims related to mental health issues, including stress and anxiety, are on the rise."

---

You can read the full article here. (Please note this publication requires a paid subscription)