Spring is in the air.

The pending long weekend is what everybody needs right now.

We are well and truly in the slide towards Easter - just one more working day after today and then a lovely four-day long weekend. Some of us will need to work a bit on Friday and Monday, but even so, it will be great to have a break. Hopefully cook a nice meal to share with the immediate (and by that, I mean VERY immediate) family/household members.

London typically empties out over Easter as people travel all over the place to be with their families. Not so this year, for obvious reason. Those who have not already left, are here for the long haul. But we will make the most of it. The weather has turned and the warmer days make a welcome change (though it is the UK, so inevitably it will rain on the long weekend itself).

And after 3 weeks of working all the hours possible, it will be great to take a breather and come back refreshed to start Q2.
